Development Study with Germany, c. 1919–1945

Specimen Paper

A954/14

Morning/Afternoon

Time: 2 hours

Candidates answer on a separate answer booklet.

Additional materials: Answer booklet (8 pages)

INSTRUCTIONS TO CANDIDATES

- Write your name, centre number and candidate number on the answer booklet.
- Read each question carefully and make sure you know what to do before you start each answer.
- Write your answers, in black ink only, in the answer booklet.
- There are two sections in this paper:
Section A (Development Study)
Choose one of these options:
Either (a) Medicine Through Time (Pages 2–4)
Or (b) Crime and Punishment Through Time (Pages 6–8)
Then answer Question 1 OR Question 5 and one other question from the option you have chosen.
Section B (Depth Study)
Answer Question 9 and one other question.
- Write the numbers of the questions you have answered in the box on the front of the answer booklet.

INFORMATION FOR CANDIDATES

- The number of marks for each question is given in brackets [] at the end of each question or part question.
- The total number of marks for this paper is 81.
- You will be awarded marks for quality of written communication in the following questions:
Development Study, questions 2(c), 3(c), 4(c), 6(c), 7(c) and 8(c).
Depth Study, questions 10(c) and 11(c).
- Questions marked with a pencil (✎) will carry 3 additional marks for spelling, punctuation and grammar.

This document consists of 16 pages.

Section A: Development Study

In this section, answer questions from EITHER:

(a) Medicine Through Time OR (b) Crime and Punishment Through Time

(a) Medicine Through Time

Some of the questions require you to use sources. In these questions, you will need to use your knowledge of the topic to interpret and evaluate the sources. When you are asked to use specific sources you must do so, but you may also use any of the other sources within the question if they are relevant.

You should spend about 1 hour on this section.

Answer Question 1 and ONE other question.

- 1 Study the sources carefully and then answer the questions which follow.

Source A

An illustration of a man having his leg amputated around 1800.

Source B

Everything was soaked in carbolic, including hands, instruments and patients' skin. The whole area of the operation was covered in carbolic spray, which got into every part of the wound. Our faces and coat-sleeves often dripped with it.

It was a relief to us all when the spray was abandoned. It was costly and cumbersome and often broke down. Carbolic acid made sad work with our hands which were always rough and cracked.

An account of Lister's carbolic spray in use. The author was a doctor who worked with Lister in the 1870s.

(a) Study Source A.

What dangers faced patients during and after operations at the beginning of the nineteenth century? Use the source and your knowledge to explain your answer. [7]

(b) Study Source B.

'By the 1870s surgery had improved little since the time of Paré.' How far does this source support this interpretation? Use the source and your knowledge to explain your answer. [8]

Choose ONE of the following three questions.

You must answer ALL parts of the question you choose.

Remember to explain your answer as fully as possible and support it with specific detail.

- 2 Ancient societies like those of the Egyptians and the Greeks made more progress in medicine than people in the Middle Ages.
- (a) Briefly describe the medical progress made by the Ancient Egyptians. [5]
- (b) Why was bloodletting widely used in the Middle Ages? [7]
- (c) How far do you agree that the Ancient Greeks made more progress in medicine than people in the Middle Ages? Explain your answer. [8]
-  Spelling, punctuation and grammar [3]
- 3 Both religion and chance have had an important impact on the development of medicine.
- (a) Briefly describe the impact of religion on Ancient Greek medicine. [5]
- (b) Explain ways in which chance has had an impact on the development of medicine. [7]
- (c) 'Since Roman times religion has hindered, rather than helped, medical progress.' Explain how far you agree with this statement. [8]
-  Spelling, punctuation and grammar [3]
- 4 Since the time of the Ancient Greeks there have been many ideas about the cause and the prevention of disease.
- (a) Briefly describe how the Romans tried to prevent disease. [5]
- (b) Explain why there was so much opposition to smallpox vaccination throughout the nineteenth century. [7]
- (c) 'Between the time of the Ancient Greeks and the end of the nineteenth century there has been more continuity than change in ideas about the causes of disease.' Explain to what extent you agree with this statement. [8]
-  Spelling, punctuation and grammar [3]

Some of the questions require you to use sources. In these questions, you will need to use your knowledge of the topic to interpret and evaluate the sources. When you are asked to use specific sources you must do so, but you may also use any of the other sources within the question if they are relevant.

You should spend about 1 hour on this section.

Answer Question 5 and ONE other question.

- 5 Study the sources carefully and then answer the questions which follow.

Source A

Cutting down growing trees.

Being out at night with a blackened face.

Stealing from a rabbit warren.

A list of some of the crimes that could be punished by the death penalty in the late eighteenth century.

Source B

An engraving, published in 1748, about the Hawkhurst Gang of smugglers. The engraving is called 'The Bloody and Inhuman Smugglers throwing down stones on the dying Body of Daniel Chater [an informer], whom they had flung into Lady Holt Well'.

5(a) Study Source A.

What are the reasons why these eighteenth century crimes could be punished by the death penalty? Use the source and your knowledge to explain your answer. [7]

(b) Study Source B.

'Smugglers were violent and feared.' How far do you agree with this interpretation? Use the source and your knowledge to explain your answer. [8]

Choose ONE of the following three questions.

You must answer ALL parts of the question you choose.

Remember to explain your answer as fully as possible and support it with specific detail.

- 6 Some attitudes about crime and punishment have changed over the years.
- (a) Briefly describe ways in which the Romans punished criminals. [5]
 - (b) Use your knowledge of the Middle Ages to explain why the story of Robin Hood was popular at that time. [7]
 - (c) 'The treatment of criminals in the nineteenth century was different from their treatment in the Middle Ages.' Explain how far you agree with this statement. [8]
-  Spelling, punctuation and grammar [3]
- 7 Preventing lawlessness and disorder has always been a major concern of the authorities.
- (a) Briefly describe how criminals were caught in the Middle Ages. [5]
 - (b) Explain why Sir Robert Peel was able to set up a police force in the late 1820s. [7]
 - (c) Were the Middle Ages more lawless and violent than the nineteenth century? Explain your answer. [8]
-  Spelling, punctuation and grammar [3]
- 8 There have been many different ways of breaking the law over the centuries.
- (a) Briefly describe the Gunpowder Plot of 1605. [5]
 - (b) Explain why the authorities acted as they did towards the demonstrators at Peterloo in 1819. [7]
 - (c) How far was the treatment of conscientious objectors in the Second World War the same as in the First World War? Explain your answer. [8]
-  Spelling, punctuation and grammar [3]

It looks like the operation is really painful – the patient in Source A is being held down and he is screaming. This is because they had no anaesthetics and so the patient had to put up with terrible pain. Some people died of the pain. Another danger was infection. There was no understanding of germs and thus no antiseptics. Operating tools were not kept sterile as shown in the picture where they are lined up on a wooden work bench. Everyone in the picture is wearing normal clothes, not gowns and masks. So if the patient survived the operation they may well have died afterwards of infection.

Some progress had been made in surgery by the 1870s. In Paré’s time, in the sixteenth century, people who had surgery faced a lot of pain and a great danger of infection because of methods such as cauterisation. This was where boiling oil was used to treat and seal wounds on the battlefield. Paré developed an antiseptic ointment made from eggs and oil of roses which helped to prevent infection. However, this new method was not commonly used until much later. But Lister, in Source B, was trying to find a way of stopping infection completely. His carbolic spray did work and did cut down the death rate during and after operations so there was progress. However the source also shows that there was a lot of opposition to the spray from doctors and nurses because it was very unpleasant for them to use. The fact that the source was written by a doctor who worked with Lister means that he did have first-hand experience of how difficult the spray was to use. This increases the reliability of this source as evidence that improvement since Paré was not so great. However this doctor, like many other doctors at the time, clearly was unsympathetic towards the spray and therefore we cannot necessarily trust his judgement of it. Surgery had improved in other areas by the 1870s because anaesthetics had been developed. James Simpson had discovered chloroform in the mid-nineteenth century. This made it possible for patients to have painless operations. On the other hand, one of the big problems in surgery was the loss of blood and this had not been solved by the 1870s. Although blood transfusions were carried out, doctors did not understand about blood groups and so these transfusions were usually unsuccessful. This prevented complicated operations from being carried out successfully. To sum up, there are some ways in which I agree with the interpretation because although there were improvements there were often problems with the improvements and there was still much to be done.

This was accepted by everybody as the way to explain why people became ill. This was because the humours got out of balance. One way of getting the humours back into balance was to bleed people so that the excess blood was lost and the person became better. A second reason was the control of the Church. Many people continued to believe Galen's ideas, including his support for the Four Humours Theory, because his ideas fitted in with the idea of there being one God, who had made all the parts of the body fit together perfectly. So for centuries, Christians did not dare to challenge Galen's ideas.

It allowed the wealthy classes to spend their time being educated. They were very interested in the natural world around them and began to develop theories of how the world worked. One of these ideas was the theory of the Four Humours which provided a natural explanation for why people became ill and how they could stay healthy. The Greeks made much more progress than the people in the Middle Ages because the Christian Church held things back in the Middle Ages. It taught that illness could be caused by devils or by God as a punishment. God had to be prayed to, to make people better because he was the only one powerful enough to do this. However, there was a lot of progress made in medicine in the Middle Ages in monasteries. They provided clean, pure water for the monks so that they did not catch disease and established some very important hospitals. These hospitals provided care and treatment for a lot of the community living nearby. The Greeks made more progress because they introduced the idea that disease had natural causes, and the treatments being used in the monastic hospitals were based on Greek ideas, like the Four Humours.

For example, when Fleming went on holiday and left plates of germ cultures behind, he returned to find that spores had entered his laboratory and mould had grown on the germ cultures. This mould had the ability to kill the staphylococcus germs and was later used to produce penicillin which saved the lives of millions of people. Another example is Pasteur. Pasteur discovered his vaccine for chicken cholera because he left one of his team, Charles Chamberland, to inoculate some chickens with some germs. But Chamberland forgot and then left the laboratory for the summer. When Chamberland came back he finally inoculated the chickens, expecting them to die, but they didn't, even when injected with fresh germs. Pasteur realised that the old germs must have protected the chickens, just like in Jenner's vaccine.

This was because they fitted in with Christian ideas about there being one creator. They did not allow anyone to criticise or improve his ideas. So those of his ideas that were wrong were simply believed by everyone and no progress was made. However, the Church also helped medical progress. They built monasteries which were really good systems of public health. They piped in clean fresh water, had proper drains and even proper toilets. So monasteries were often very healthy places. Through the monasteries, the Church established the first hospitals for people in their local community. Overall, religion slowed things up. Very few people lived in monasteries and the benefits of their public health systems did not spread to the towns where conditions were awful. But stopping people investigating Galen’s ideas stopped all progress in medicine for hundreds of years. There was no dissection of humans because people thought that Galen had described the body correctly. So the whole progress of medicine was brought to a full stop.

In the middle of the nineteenth century most people did not understand about vaccines. They did not realise that they had to be injected with the smallpox disease in order to prevent against getting the illness in the future. They were frightened and suspicious of the medical advancement. During the 1850s, vaccination against smallpox became compulsory and many people did not like this. They did not see why the government should force them to have their children vaccinated. This caused a lot of opposition against government interference in their lives. Also, there was religious opposition. Some clergy claimed that smallpox was a punishment from God for leading an immoral life, and they did not like the fact the vaccine came from animal cells. The clergy thought that the only cure was to lead a pure life.

Some beliefs have stayed the same for much of this time, for example, the Romans believed that bad air spread disease. They always made sure they built towns away from swamps because they thought that the bad air and smells from swamps caused disease. At the beginning of the nineteenth century people still believed bad air caused disease. Even when John Snow showed that cholera was spread by water and not air a lot of people did not believe him. However, when Pasteur came along and proved that disease was spread by germs most people had to accept it. This was a revolution and opened up new kinds of treatments, like drugs and vaccinations. Overall, this is why I think there has been more change than continuity. Although, there were periods of little change such as in the Middle Ages, if you compare the nineteenth century with the Ancient Greeks overall there has been an enormous amount of change such as the understanding that disease is caused by germs instead of by gods.

They wanted to protect their property. They regarded the rabbits in the warrens on their land as their property, particularly as many warrens were for farmed rabbits and stealing was against the law. They saw poaching as theft and they did not want people making their faces black because this is what they did when they were poaching at night so they would not be seen. Another reason is that the eighteenth century was the time of the Bloody Code. This introduced very harsh punishments for minor offences because people thought that the crime rate was rising quickly.

Use the source and your knowledge to explain your answer. Level 4 (7–8 marks) Candidates demonstrate sound knowledge and understanding of the period, and sound analysis and evaluation of the source, to evaluate effectively the interpretation that smugglers were violent and feared. Level 3 (5–6 marks) Candidates demonstrate some knowledge and understanding of the period, and some understanding of the source, to evaluate the interpretation that smugglers were violent and feared. Level 2 (3–4 marks) Candidates demonstrate basic knowledge and understanding of the period, and basic understanding of the source, to comment on the interpretation that smugglers were violent and feared. Level 1 (1–2 marks) Candidates describe the source and produce a simple response. Level 0 (0 marks) No response or no response worthy of credit.	8	This is an example of a top level response that may be used as guidance demonstrating evidence of all three AOs. I partly agree with this interpretation because the source does show smugglers murdering an informer. However, the engraving was clearly meant to turn people against smugglers and support punishment for them, hence the persuasive language in the title: ‘The Bloody and Inhuman Smugglers’. The source also shows the smugglers killing the informer in a particularly brutal way by throwing stones onto him as he is down in the well. The shock and horror of this crime would also mean that people would turn against them. However, some smugglers at the time were violent. For example, the Hawkhurst Gang in the source, who were a notorious band of smugglers, carried out raids on government customs houses along the south coast of England. They took goods like tea, coffee, brandy and rum. They did kill revenue officers and informers. Some intimidated jurors. The interpretation that smugglers were violent and feared is therefore to some extent accurate. But not all eighteenth century smugglers were like this. Some were just ordinary people who did not have enough to live on and needed to make some money by getting goods from overseas and not paying duties on them. Many people did not regard smuggling as a crime because they thought the government should not have money from duties. In many communities everybody was involved in smuggling in one way or another, even landowners and vicars would be taking goods from the smugglers – so there was no way that they were afraid of them. Overall I disagree with this interpretation because the majority of smugglers were not violent or feared.

Outlaws were people who had defied the law by fleeing instead of being taken to court and were often popular heroes. They were seen by some people as the real Saxons standing up against Norman laws, or foreign laws. Many ordinary people hated the forest laws which were introduced by the Normans. These were laws that stopped anyone hunting or taking wood from the King's forests. People needed this timber and hunting deer would give them some meat to eat which they did not normally have. So the story of Robin Hood was popular because people liked to hear about someone breaking these laws. They could see Robin as a Saxon hero against the Normans. Also, people enjoyed hearing about rich and powerful people suffering. Kings like Henry VI did not punish nobles who broke the law and let them get away with violence. Another reason is that the story told of Robin being outlawed by King John who was the brother of King Richard I. When Richard was away on crusade John ruled the country and was very unpopular. Robin's story was popular among the people because it showed Robin getting the better of the bad King John.

Prisons were meant to reform the prisoners and to do this they introduced the separate system which stopped prisoners mixing and spreading bad habits. They would spend most of their time in their cells where they would work and say their prayers. This was different from the Middle Ages where prisons were not used as a punishment but just to hold someone while they waited for their trial. However, there were similarities as well. In the nineteenth century, physical punishments were still being used. From 1850, prisoners faced more hard labour and there were harsh punishments like whipping. This can be likened to using the stocks, whipping and pillory in the Middle Ages. Overall, the treatment of criminals in the nineteenth century was very different to that of the Middle Ages. The whole purpose of prisons had changed. Even when physical punishments were still being used, they were being used for a different reason. The hope was that this would reform the prisoners. The idea of public humiliation was gone.

The first reason was because many people were afraid of popular protests and even revolution. This was soon after the French Revolution and they were afraid the same thing would happen in Britain, especially after riots like the Luddites and Peterloo. Rich people thought that a police force would protect their property and wealth and keep law and order. Troops had been used at demonstrations such as Peterloo and this had been unpopular. The English were always worried about the army becoming too powerful and taking away their liberties. A police force would mean that problems like this could be dealt without resorting to the military. There was also a real problem with law and order. As towns like London and Manchester grew, there was much more crime and the old systems of law and order, like constables, were inadequate. Even the only police force that existed, the Bow Street Runners, could not cope, although Peel did copy some of its ideas. Also, the government was starting to get more involved in reform generally in Britain. People were gradually getting used to the idea of paying taxes for public services and so government was able to raise more money in taxes to pay for a police force.

By the time of the late nineteenth century, as the pay of the police got better and the quality of recruits improved they became more effective in catching criminals, especially when the detective branch was set up. By the end of the century the crime rate had gone down and people were glad to see the police around. They were so successful that police forces were introduced all over the country. In many ways the Middle Ages were not as lawless and violent as the nineteenth century. In the nineteenth century new industrial cities developed containing thousands of people, many of them living in poverty. This led to an increase in crime which the authorities found very difficult to respond to. In the Middle Ages, most people lived in a small village where everyone knew everyone else and methods like the hue and cry and tithings were adequate for most crimes. In conclusion, I think that the nineteenth century saw a growth in crime so this did lead to more lawlessness in big cities than in the Middle Ages. But it also led to solutions for this new situation, like the development of prisons and the development of the police force. So eventually the nineteenth century solved many of these problems and it was not more lawless than the Middle Ages.

They all knew about the French Revolution in the 1780s which overthrew the social structure. They did not want this to happen there. There were a lot of demonstrators and this obviously worried the authorities. This is why the government passed the Six Acts which banned meetings of over 50 people. Another reason was that the yeomanry were on duty on the day. They were not full time soldiers but part time and they were made up of the middle classes who owned property and factories. They did not have the discipline of proper soldiers and also were worried about the threat to their property and the social order. They were also worried that Hunt, the main speaker, would whip the crowd up into violence. This is why they over-reacted and began to cut down women and children.

In some ways the treatment of conscientious objectors in the two world wars was very different. In the First World War they were generally regarded as cowards and about a third of them were put in prison where they were treated very badly. They were sometimes attacked by the public and after the war they were not given the vote. By the time of the Second World War attitudes had changed to some degree. Churchill believed that it was wrong to persecute them. Prison was only used as a last resort and they were usually given other work to do that helped the war like driving ambulances or carrying out medical work. Those that already worked on farms or in important factories were allowed to carry on with these jobs. People believed they could still do something useful. However, the treatment was in some ways similar. In both wars there was conscription so people were expected to fight for their country. In both wars they had to justify themselves in front of a tribunal and some of them were given alternative work to do. I think that the attitude of the government had changed but the attitude of the public had not. They still regarded these men as cowards and some lost their jobs or were attacked in public. Although conscientious objectors were treated rather better in the Second World War, the basic attitudes had stayed the same. This organisation intended to indoctrinate young girls into Nazi ways. By the end of the 1930s, 82% of young people belonged to this type of organisation. They were made to do lots of physical education like route-marching and swimming so that they were fit. This was important because in the 1920s the birth rate in Germany had fallen and Hitler wanted it increased so that he could build a strong army. It was therefore important for girls to be healthy and strong to have lots of children. They were also given training in how to be good mothers and wives which was the role the Nazis saw for women. They were also indoctrinated in Nazi views about race to ensure that they only married Aryan men to produce racially pure babies for the Nazi state. The recruitment poster shows a healthy, happy, Aryan girl in her uniform which would encourage other young girls to believe that joining this Nazi organisation led to happiness. This was crucial to Hitler because as explained above, women were essential for his plans. The League was where he could indoctrinate them into his ideas. The source has no date but if it was published during the war, it would have even more importance because that was when the girls worked as nurses or as searchlight operators – all helping the war effort.

In some ways these two sources are different. In Source B the Jew has money in one hand (possibly rich) and a whip in the other while Source C shows a Jew who is well dressed (looking quite rich) and friendly to the girl although she clearly does not like it. Source B is trying to say that Jews are like communists and will support Russia (shown by the map with hammer and sickle under his arm) while the other one says that Jews will be after young German girls. However, they are both pieces of anti-Jewish propaganda, so they have a very similar message. They both depict the Jewish men as intimidating and frightening in different ways. Therefore they both represent a threat to German society.

	Q: Study Source D. ‘Nazi propaganda was ineffective.’ Use the source and your knowledge to explain to what extent you agree with this interpretation. Level 4 (6–7 marks) Candidates demonstrate sound knowledge and understanding of the period, and sound evaluation of the source, to evaluate effectively the interpretation that Nazi propaganda was ineffective. Level 3 (4–5 marks) Candidates demonstrate some knowledge and understanding of the period, and some understanding of the source, to evaluate the interpretation that Nazi propaganda was ineffective. Level 2 (2–3 marks) Candidates demonstrate basic knowledge and understanding of the period, and basic understanding of the source, to comment on the interpretation that Nazi propaganda was ineffective. Level 1 (1 mark) Candidates describe the source and produce a very limited response. Level 0 (0 marks) No response or no response worthy of credit.	7	This is an example of a top level response that may be used as guidance, demonstrating evidence of all three AOs. This source goes some way to supporting the interpretation because it is written by an eye-witness and provides evidence that Nazi propaganda was not very effective. The author was in the cafe and saw that most people took no notice of the broadcasting of Hitler. This would suggest the propaganda was not very successful. However, there are several considerations to be taken into account with this statement. First, the journalist, being British may have wanted to make fun of the Nazis. Secondly, one cannot draw too many conclusions from one cafe. However, the most important point is that we know far more about the Nazi propaganda machine than just what is in this source. One effective move the Nazis made was to take over all radio stations in Germany. Goebbels had cheap radio sets produced and by 1939 all German households had one. Goebbels controlled all the programmes and used it to send out propaganda. The radios did not pick up foreign broadcasts and so the Nazis had complete control of what was going into people’s homes. But it was more than homes as the Nazis had loudspeakers set up in factories, offices and public squares. Radio wardens were even appointed to make sure that no one moved from their desk before the broadcast had finished. Of course, this does not prove that people were being affected by the propaganda. As the source shows there was a lot of passive resistance by Germans. People would refuse to give the ‘Heil Hitler’ salute or ignore the radio and so it is difficult to say how effective the propaganda was. The source was early in the Nazi regime in 1934 and later in the period there is evidence that propaganda was more organised and better enforced. It is hard to say how far this interpretation is valid because although there was no mass rebellion against the Nazis, people’s acceptance of the Nazis might not have been a result of propaganda but of people wanting to keep out of trouble.

The Germans hated the treaty because its terms were dictated by France, Britain and the USA. Germany was not allowed to take part in the talks and if she had not agreed to the terms then Germany would have been invaded by the Allied Powers. Another important reason was that Germany, along with her allies, was forced to accept responsibility for the First World War, this was known as the 'War Guilt Clause'. This was one of the main reasons why it was so unpopular. The treaty also made Germany pay reparations of £6.6 billion. This was almost impossible to pay for a war-torn nation, especially for one that had lost 15% of its economic resources, as well as being required to give up some of her lucrative territories including large areas of Northern France, in the treaty. It would lead to high taxes for generations in Germany.

For example, Stresemann sorted out the hyperinflation crisis. He did this by destroying the old currency and introducing a new one, the Rentenmark. This meant that the economy started to recover and people were able to afford to buy more goods with their wages. By 1928, industrial production had recovered to pre-war levels. On the other hand, the Weimar Republic suffered very badly after the Wall Street Crash. The Depression spread to Germany, causing massive unemployment and political instability. The Weimar government was not very effective at responding to this, they cut benefits to the unemployed and there was an enormous amount of poverty. Overall, I would say that the Weimar Republic had gone a long way to recovering from its problems, but only in the short term; it needed more time to fully recover. Germany was allowed back into the international community, most of the economy had recovered and the political situation was more stable. If it had not been for the Great Depression hitting in 1929, it is possible that recovery would have continued. However, the country was overly reliant on loans from the USA and people still did not fully trust the government, which made it easier for extremist parties to win support after 1929.

For much of the 1930s, women had been discouraged from going to work and had been encouraged to stay at home and look after their husbands and have lots of babies. Loans were given to new brides and motherhood classes were encouraged. However, once the war started, women were expected to help the war effort. They were first expected to help serve refreshments at stations to servicemen and evacuees. Others worked for the Red Cross. However, they were still expected to have more children. For the Nazis it was even more vital that women had lots of children and even unmarried women were encouraged to do so. Later when the war began to go badly the Nazis tried to mobilise all women who did not have young children. A million took up work, very different from the 1930s. They worked in factories, as fire-fighters, as nurses and aircraft defence. However, Hitler was very reluctant to let them work in the war industries. This work was done by foreign labour and prisoners. They were even allowed to join the army to fill office posts that were left empty by the men going to the front. By 1945, there were half a million women in the armed forces. However, many women tried to avoid doing any of this work and by 1945 of the 3 million women called up only 1 million took jobs. So for some women there were not that many changes apart from living in war conditions and the air raids. However, even for these women their lives had changed in small ways. Hair-dyeing and perming were banned and there was clothes rationing.

They produce a response that	8	This is an example of a top level response that may be used as guidance demonstrating evidence of AOs 1 and 2. There is plenty of evidence that support for the Nazi regime went down during the war years. When the leaders of the Hitler Youth went off to war this left less experienced people in charge and the focus became totally military. This made it less popular and some young people stopped going, showing a lack of support for the regime. A lot of the opposition came from young people who were unhappy with Nazi policies. The Edelweiss Pirates opposed the regime. They beat up Hitler Youth patrols and sheltered army deserters. Another group called the White Rose group led by Hans and Sophie Scholl sent out leaflets attacking Nazi policies towards the Jews. Swing Youth opposed the Nazis by listening to jazz music which the Nazis hated because they associated it with Black Americans and thought it was decadent. There was even a decrease of support in the army and in 1944 there was the bomb plot when von Stauffenberg tried to kill Hitler. However, it is difficult to say how much support for the Nazis declined. Many people did not dare to oppose the regime which was still sending out propaganda about how well the war was going and still using intimidation and violence to keep people in order. Many Germans were loyal to their country and did what they could to help. This might be collecting money and clothes for the war effort, volunteering to fight on the front. In 1941, Germans gave 1.5 million furs and 67 million woollen garments to help clothe the German army in Russia. So it is clear that a lot of people still supported the regime. Overall, the opposition was small and I would have to conclude that most Germans stayed loyal to their country even if not to the Nazis.

Spelling, punctuation and grammar (SPaG) assessment grid for use with questions 2c, 3c, 4c, 6c, 7c, 8c, 10c and 11c

High performance 3 marks
Candidates spell, punctuate and use rules of grammar with consistent accuracy and effective control of meaning in the context of the demands of the question. Where required, they use a wide range of specialist terms adeptly and with precision.
Intermediate performance 2 marks
Candidates spell, punctuate and use rules of grammar with considerable accuracy and general control of meaning in the context of the demands of the question. Where required, they use a good range of specialist terms with facility.
Threshold performance 1 mark
Candidates spell, punctuate and use rules of grammar with reasonable accuracy in the context of the demands of the question. Any errors do not hinder meaning in the response. Where required, they use a limited range of specialist terms appropriately.
